

Abstract

In this thesis the specificities and needs of the youth at risk on the labour market are analyzed, using literature and author's own experience (1st chapter) as well as a qualitative survey (2nd chapter). The result found is five basic needs. According to these, the actual job offer for this target group is then considered. After a short introduction to social entrepreneurship (3rd chapter), guidelines for employing youth at risk are offered, based on the needs found. These guidelines are offered in a general sense (4th chapter), as well as in the form of a particular model of a low-threshold carpentry workshop (5th chapter).
