

Abstract

This Bachelor thesis focuses on research of program of electrification in Czechoslovakia between 1918 and 1938. It utilizes political press and tries to think about this process from two points of view. Firstly, this thesis shows adopted laws concerned with electrification. That is followed with how the legislative process was reflected in main political press and also the way how the electrification was presented in public. Secondly, this thesis presents organizational structure of electrification in South Bohemia district. Then, it shows development of electrification in Tábor city neighborhood according to information in regional press. It should reflect how citizens could be informed about it at that time. Last chapter tries to reconstruct electricity costs development in countryside villages and in the Tábor city.