

The presented thesis focuses on a new type of social service for victims of domestic violence in the Czech Republic – intervention centres. After dealing with the characteristics of domestic violence and legislation covering domestic violence there is an introduction to these intervention centres. According to research, the centres provide services for victims of domestic violence and coordinate the cooperation of expert teams in all regions of the Czech Republic.