

The work "Stalingrad - the turning point of the war", describes reasons, process and results of the largest battle of the military history. The text is divided into eleven chapters.

The introduction contains a brief analysis of used literature followed by the brief portrayal of the first year of the war on the eastern front until the defeating of the German army at Moscow.

But the emphasis of the work is the process and the result of the struggle of the fortress on Volha. The attention is paid also to the operation Mars, which was secret until relatively recent time and which would (in the case of success) shade the Stalingrad counter-offensive.

The method of the work is chronological with the accent to the everyday suffering of soldiers and non-combatants.

The purpose is to show a various view of the eastern field, supported by the relevant citations of publications, which are stated in a list of used literature.

The author tried to overcome the black-and-white view on the war conflict and contribute to the understanding of the one of the second world war key moments.
