Bachelor thesis deals with alcohol dependence, and poor bio-psycho-social effects on humans during its overuse. It indicates an adverse effect on the human organism with potentially the most common diseases which can occur in alcoholics. The thesis presents treatment options and follow aftercare programs. This work is based mainly on the research part, which consists of two surveys. The first part consists of quantitative research, using a questionnaire of our own design and world-renowned standardized questionnaire WHOQOL-BREF. The second part is developed using qualitative research, which is applied using a standardized interview with six respondents. The data obtained from this research clearly indicates a positive change of abstaining alcoholic after treatment, and in the physical, mental and social.
