

Abstract

The purpose of this master thesis is to analyze and examine the changes in the Slovak political scene between the parliamentary elections 2010 and parliamentary elections 2016. The work derives from Sartori's theory of party systems and materials from Institute for Public Affairs, which discussed the examined period in their publications. By examining the motion, master thesis devotes its attention to the particular governments as well as to the characteristics and electoral support to relevant parties. On the one hand, the phenomenon of oligarchical democracy has deepened in the examined period, on the other hand a significant regrouping voters support for the center-right of the political spectrum from value-established political parties on new, difficult to define entities, but also growing support for anti-system party with fascist past.

Keywords

elections, political parties, oligarchic democracy, populism, center-right parties, anti-system parties