

This thesis describes Markov processes with discrete time and finite sets of possible values where some states are so called radical and from the outer point of view, the chain leaves them immediately. The basic theory of chains with control is generalized for the case with radical states, whose visits are penalized. Our intention is to find the optimal homogeneous control (by a modification of Howard's iterative algorithm) and to broaden the theory for processes which are controlled by adaptive strategies.