

Abstract

This Bachelor thesis deals with the well-being of adolescents in the context of parenting styles. The parenting styles are an important determinant for the evolution of a child and child development, they strongly manifest themselves in the parent-child interaction and they contribute to whether or not a child experiences well-being. The aim of this paper is to pursue the phenomenon of the adolescent well-being in particular with regard to the parenting styles. The information used for this thesis comes from Czech sources and information from some foreign researches, which were aimed at various fields of this subject, were added. This thesis contains a project of a research on the relation between parenting styles and the well-being of adolescents at the age from 16 to 18. The suggested research is quantitative and its aim is to fill in the information on this subject. The results would be beneficial since they provide an opportunity for a comparison with a similar research that was carried out in Slovakia.

Key words

parenting styles, parenting styles of fathers, parenting styles of mothers, well-being, life satisfaction, adolescence