

Abstract:

This bachelor thesis concerns on geographical profiling, whereas it emphasizes the crime of break-in in the context of this profiling. In the first part, the thesis defines the term geographical profiling. It also gives an attention to history of it and concentrates on the basic theories used in profiling. The thesis also describes the theory of rational choice, the routine activity theory, the broken windows theory and the theory of crime patterns. In the next part, there is a concentration on the mapping process itself. The anchor points, the situational precipitators of crime, the hot spots and the models of crime are described. a whole chapter is dedicated to the hunting typology of perpetrators. The thesis also shows different possibilities of prevention with using the geographical profiling. One of the chapters summarizes the information about break-in. The part of the thesis is also the suggestion of research. The aim of this project out mainly situational factors of break-in. It also compare the radius of the perpetrator.

Keywords:

geographical profiling, perpetrator, burglary, crime, crime models