

Abstract

This thesis reviews the surveys of the settlements from the Roman period in the microregion of the Middle Section of Výrovka river. This area belongs to the Kolín district and consists of municipalities Dobřichov, Chotutice, Pečky, Plaňany, Radim, Ratenice, Velké Chvalovice and Vrbčany. The thesis presents described archaeological sites as well as unpublished find assemblages and isolated finds deposited in Národní muzeum and Polabské muzeum v Poděbradech, where also the previous collection of Pečky museum is currently held. In addition to scientific literature, the notes of curators of three above mentioned museums and the records in inventory books were used as a source of data. Gathered information served to create the broad picture of microregion during the Roman period and to draw the map of all known archaeological sites of this period.

Keywords

Roman Period; microregion, settlement site; settlement development; archaeological excavations