

This work is focused on estimating interval data by real functions and interval functions. It presents possibilistic and necessity models of interval regression and compares its strong and weak formulations. Further we describe algorithms of linear and nonlinear estimation. The application part is based on demonstration of tolerance method and subtracting tolerance method analysing real cases.