Abstract

The thesis focuses on the war conflict on Falkland Islands between the Great Britain and Argentina and on the influence of the dispute about the sovereignty over the islands on the relationships of these two countries. The main purpose is to discover how the sovereignty dispute has been affecting the relations of the countries. The work deals with the historical context of the conflict and with the effort to prevent the conflict. Furthermore, the thesis describes the course of the war on Falkland Islands and the impact this war has been having after it’s end.
