

This work deals with the problem of finding the correlation matrix closest to the given symmetric matrix, the distance of which is measured considering the Frobenius norm. The theoretical part of the thesis describes a method used for finding the solution to this problem based on the dual approach and application of Newton method. The method is further modified for other cases. In the practical part we apply the theory to simple math problems.