Head of Bachelor Thesis: Doc. PhDr. Irena Slepčková, CSc.

Aims of the work: Mapping the development and the current form of female football in the Czech Republic (hereinafter only the Czech Republic) in clubs and on a global scale. To find out how the situation in female football is perceived by representatives of local clubs and people working in this sector at the FAČR.

Work methodology: To achieve the goals of the bachelor’s thesis, a method of controlled interview were used, in which respondents answered 10 pre-processed questions. The questions were specifically designed for this research. Three coaches of different age categories and performance groups, 2 manageres from the clubs of the Prague „S“ and a member of the UEFA Women´s Football Commission have submitted the survey.

Results of the thesis: Based on the bachelor thesis interview, I found out that woman’s football in the Czech Republic is increasing popularity a lot. The membership base is growing every day, which confirms that woman’s football is the most developing sport in the world. The financial budget for woman’s football has increased, but all respondents agree that the funds in this area are little compared to the rest of the world, which results in the failure of the Czech woman’s football team in the MS or ME.
