

Summary

This thesis deals with the figure of James the Just. Through the analysis of selected New Testament divisions, apocryphal writings referring to James, and historical works of Josephus Flavius and Eusebius, argues to support the hypothesis that James the Just, Brother of the Lord, immediately after Jesus' death became the leader of the first community of Jesus' followers and had the decisive word in it.