

Primary ciliary dyskinesia is a rare hereditary disorder with impairment of cilia characterized by chronic cough with sputum, bronchiectasis or pneumonia. Regular exercise training should affect pulmonary function, promote mucociliary clearance and improve quality of life. The aim of this thesis is to compare the aerobic fitness of patients with PCD with a control group.