

Abstract

In this bachelor thesis I deal with military sport in Czechoslovakia in the Years 1948-1963. I examine the patterns of unified physical education and sport, military sport at high performance level and mass sport activity. I pay great attention to high performance sport. After the Communist Party seized the power sport became a significant factor in Czechoslovak society. The Army was an important part of the complex of changes in Czechoslovak sport that occurred after 1948. It allowed the talented athletes to achieve a high performance level of sport and provided them with proper conditions. Physical education and sport became compulsory parts of military training. In the initial chapter I discuss the development and character of sport in Czechoslovakia since the end of World War Two until the establishing of Czechoslovakia union of physical education. In the second chapter I clarify the concept of high performance sport and present the periodization of military high performance sport. Third chapter contains data on physical education and mass sport activity in Czechoslovak Army. In the last chapter I demonstrate an attitude of communist regime to the making of the New socialist man.
