The bachelor thesis entitled „Internet Censorship in the Russian Federation and Principles of Its Work“ describes the state control of electronic resources in Russia. The thesis summarizes types of websites which could be limited according to Russian law. It also provides an analysis of unwritten rules leading to the ban of a website. Unwritten rules are discovered using quantitative research of network servers banned by the General Procurator of Russia in period April – June 2017.

State institutions responsible for the Internet censorship in Russia are examined as well. Main concern is given to a federal service called Roskomnadzor. Circumstances, in which the service was founded, its purposes and intentions are explained in the text.

The thesis also studies the complementarity between the Internet censorship and other methods of network regulation. Different impacts of direct and soft censorship are mentioned too.