

Abstract

The main goal of this rigorous thesis is to analyse the legal framework for game hunting in the Czech Republic and its historical development in order to suggest some possible improvements of its shortcomings. The main focus is concentrated on the legal framework for gamekeeping and fishing. This rigorous thesis does compare also the local Czech legislation with the international law and with the legal framework in the European Union. A special attention is paid to the comparison of the Czech legislation for game hunting with its Slovakian equivalent.
