

This dissertation focuses on questions of social standing of asylum applicants, as a result of foreign migration transfers onto the territory of the Czech Republic. The attention is orientated on the asylum framework legislation and on the institutions, which are charged to fulfil this legislation or those which operate in the field of asylum administration in the Czech Republic. Accent is put on the very process of the asylum administration procedure itself. The conclusion contains evaluation of the recent changes and eventual future development in the issues of asylum administration.