

Abstract

Title:

Dynamic competitive balance in European football leagues

Objectives

The quality of objective of this master thesis is the analysis of dynamic competitive balance of ten European football leagues. Namely the English league, the German league, the Dutch league, the Greek league, the Romanian league, the Czech league, the Danish league, the Polish league, the Cyprian league, the and the Bulgarian league and their comparison.

Methods:

Dynamic competitive balance showed by the Lorenz curve of the number of league champions during the period under review.

Results:

The results show comparison of dynamic competitive balance in top European leagues. Further refute or confirm the established assumption of same trend in the designated groups divided by market value and competitive format.

Key words:

Football, competition, dynamic balance, Lorenz curve, league market value, competitive format