Multilevel selection is an attempt to unify different approaches to the Level of selection problem. This paper examines the principles, starting points, variants and problems of this concept. Particular emphasis is placed on the relationship of this theory to Gene´s-eye view and the presentation of evidence of the usefulness of Multilevel selection in analyzing evolutionary changes.