The bachelor thesis deals with pregnancy and its influence on the quality of a pregnant woman's life. The theoretical part focuses on the definition of pregnancy, the development of foetus according to a particular trimester and the most common somatic complaints occurring at the beginning of pregnancy (nausea, vomiting, fatigue). It clarifies the term quality of life and influence in the pregnancy. The empirical part studies the quality of life in pregnancy with the help of using questionnaires focusing on finding out the rate of incidence of somatic complaints (nausea, vomiting, stomachache and fatigue) and their influence on the quality of the pregnant woman's life.
