This bachelor thesis deals with the committees and their influence in the rule-making. The aim of the thesis is to focus in more detail on the so-called mandatory committees. The analysis is dealt with by committees of the organizational, budgetary, constitutional, European affairs committees, defence committee, petitions committee, mandate and immunity, control, electoral and foreign committee. The main aim of the bachelor thesis is to analyse the activities of committees of the Chamber of Deputies of the Parliament of the Czech Republic and their influence on the results of draft laws. The thesis is structured into several framework chapters, which include subchapters dealing with the specific committees themselves. The theoretical part is divided into subchapters, each of which is dedicated to one specific committee. The analytical part of the thesis is focused on the legislative process and thanks to the knowledges of the individual committees from the theoretical part, their role in this process and ultimately their influence on the results of the draft laws is explained. Committees of the Chamber of Deputies of the Parliament of the Czech Republic are parliamentary bodies which deal with the different agendas of individual disciplines of human activity or specific matters of the internal functioning of the Chamber of Deputies. Despite this important role, the awareness of the general public about their existence, agenda, functioning or, last but not least, the current composition is very low. That is why it is obvious the need to analyze this topic.
