

Abstract

The thesis examines the engagement of the external actors in the Syrian civil war. It is focusing on five main internal actors of the conflict. Using the Heraclide method it is evaluating engagement intensity of the external actors in the conflict. Together with the examination of the external players engagement the thesis is also focusing on the relationship between the external actor and his proxy group in Syria. I examine how the international players changed their strategy or proxy groups during the time.