

Abstract

This bachelor thesis focuses on the analysis of nurses' activities working on a standard internal ward. The theoretical part focuses on the description of internal medicine and internal illnesses. It also contains a description of the departments division, nursing problems of patients with an internal illness and the concept of missed nursing care. The theoretical part ends with the description of nurses competence by the law 391/2017Sb.

The second part of the thesis, the empirical part, focuses on documenting activities of nurses on a standard internal ward during their shift using an ethnographical method which enabled me to capture and examine these activities in detail.

Keywords: Nurses activities, internal ward, internal illnesses, division of the internal department/ward, nursing problems, missed nursing care concept.
