

According to feminist scholars, the society which existed before the beginning of the Ancient Greek city state, respected more women than men. This adoration was connected with their ability to give birth to children, which was similar to the same ability of the holy nature.