

Abstract

Thesis New media as a part of media education on high schools focuses on the representation of new media in education on high school level. The trend of new media and the number of their users are still growing; the adolescents in particular spend great portion of their time using them. That is why I have decided to find out what is the position of this phenomenon in Czech education system on high school level, at grammar schools in particular. To get complex results I firstly analyse statutory documents for national curriculum, then methodological handbooks and other information sources for media education; I also look into teachers' knowledge of this topic and how they implement it to their lessons, and I also directly ask the students. The theoretical part of this thesis creates content base for the thesis itself and also for a lecture about new media that I have put together. The practical part combines qualitative and quantitative methods of research to get as precise results as possible.
