

The University of Political and Social Sciences was established by the Decree of the President in 1945 as a four-year state university in Czechoslovakia. Together with the faculties of Journalism and Politics, the Faculty of Social Studies was established. My work focuses on the curriculum of the school from 1945 to 1953 and describes teaching social workers in the context of historical changes when closing this school meant a significant reduction of social work until, at least, 1968. Benefit of my work is in processing of previously unpublished information especially in the field of university studies. The work will contribute to the clarification and expansion of the field's development. Historical method will be used as a main technique of research in this work.