

ABSTRACT:

The main theme of this thesis are issues related to childhood and adolescence in the family with addicted parent. From the point of view of adult children of addicted parent, we try to uncover how is the complex development of such children and how they can influence their future lives. From several sub-questions that are open and therefore easy to specify, we try to identify the attitudes, values and opinions of respondents who grew up in the addicted parent family. These questions are created by a work author based on her own experience.

Respondents of the research are then accidentally selected adult children of addicted parent who were interviewed.
