

Abstract

Protection of personality of the child focused on protection of physical integrity of the child

This thesis deals with protection of personality of the child. It is not possible to cover the whole area of the protection of personality of the child, therefore, this diploma thesis focuses on the problems of the protection of physical integrity of the child, compulsory vaccination and corporal punishments.

Using the descriptive and analytical method, comparative method and historical method, the aim of this thesis is to analyse and to evaluate the Czech law of protection of personality of the child, especially the protection of physical integrity of the child, to analyse the selected issues of the physical integrity of the child and to predict the further development in this area. Our current legal arrangement is compared with that of Germany and Slovakia. The text is concerned mainly with the protection of physical integrity of the child in the Czech Republic.

The diploma thesis is divided into three parts, introduction and ending. For reader's convenience, parts are further divided into chapters and subchapters

The first part is focused on the definition primary terms. This part contains a historical sketch of the protection of children focused on Convention on the Rights of the Child [including analysis the terms the best interests of child and well-being (welfare) of child], the issue of determining the point at which life begins and the boundaries of adulthood, definition of the child and protection of personality.

The second part deals with protection of personality of the child. The first chapter examines the existing legal sources affecting the protection of personality. In the second chapter are described specifics of infringement of right of protection of personality of the child. The three chapter deals with protection of personality of the child in relationships parents – child. Fourth chapter is devoted to the judicial proceeding in matters of protection of personal integrity of the child.

The third part deals with issues of protection of physical integrity of the child, vaccination and corporal punishments.

Finally, the findings of this thesis are summarized and a few considerations de lege ferenda are offered.