

Abstract

Thesis title: Moral crime and prevention

The thesis deals with the issue of moral crime and prevention. It focuses on the existing regulation of these crimes contained in Act No 40/2009 Coll., the Criminal Code, as amended. Furthermore, in this work the current regulation is compared with the previous one, namely the Criminal Code No 140/1961 Coll. The main aim of the thesis is to provide a basic and comprehensive insight into the field of moral crimes, focusing on the characteristics of the changes in the last ten years. Another aim is to outline the stereotypes and myths that have been and are tied to the crime of rape and their analysis.

The thesis deals with morality and crime in general in the first chapters. It also focuses on moral crime and its possible causes. This general basis is necessary to understand the rest of the work. The thesis mentions national and foreign sources dealing with moral crime. The most important provisions are highlighted for some international documents, and the work also contains an analysis of the Istanbul Convention which is to be ratified by the Czech Government in the near future.

The most extensive part of the thesis deals with both criminological aspects of moral crime and detailed regulation of individual facts of the case of moral offenses. In comparing the facts of the case of moral crimes of the current Criminal Code with the old Criminal Code, suggestions are made for possible changes, most evident in the subchapter Procuring, where a change in the approach to prostitution is proposed.

Finally, the thesis deals with offenders and victims of moral crime, followed by a chapter on its prevention. Both groups are defined and grouped according to certain criteria. An excursion between various prevention systems is performed at the end of the work. It is stated at what levels prevention is being regulated in the Czech Republic. Furthermore, the thesis includes the introduction of two specific prevention systems which are applied in the Czech Republic, one from abroad and the conclusion summarizing the entire chapter on prevention.
