

The goal of this work is to compare the Czech and Italian vocabulary and phraseology motivated by sense modalities and to compare the conceptualisation of emotions, regarded from the point of view of cognitive linguistics, namely, that area of cognitive linguistics that focuses on the linguistic picture of the world. This picture is entrenched in language, and thus testifies about the way how the world is conceptualized in a particular society.