The bachelor thesis deals with the impact of the migration wave (which happened between the years 2013 and 2016) on the Federal Republic of Germany. In the first chapter, the basic concepts related to migration will be explained, then the particular migration theories will be briefly introduced. The second chapter will deal with the rise of the migration; the chapter also lists the reasons for the arrival of migrants to the Federal Republic of Germany. The next part is devoted to the newly formed party Alternative for Germany, which used the anti-immigration approach to enter the provincial councils and then in 2017 completed its establishment in the political sphere by joining the Bundestag. The PEGIDA movement will also be briefly mentioned in this thesis. The last part will deal with the expenditures of Germany, which had to be spent between the years 2013 and 2016; the attention will be paid especially to social benefits for migrants, expenditures for accommodation of newly arrived migrants and the impact of the migration crisis on the budget of the Federal Republic of Germany.
