

ABSTRACT

The bachelor thesis maps the offer of services of the labor office in mediation of employment for persons after release from imprisonment. The outcome of the thesis is a recommendation to change the procedure of the Labor Office of the Czech Republic in mediation of employment after release from prison, so that these hardly employable persons are successfully placed on the labor market. These are only such changes in the process of employment mediation that are within the competence of the Labor Office Czech Republic.

The bachelor thesis consists of two parts, a part of theoretical basis and a part of the research. Theoretical basis focus on the execution of imprisonment, ie. penitentiary education and treatment program in prison and in the second half describe the services of the labor office. The research was carried out by quantitative research through a questionnaire survey among job applicants who were included in the register of job applicants after their release from prison. The quantitative survey maps the range of services offered by the labor office in recruitment for persons released from prison. At the same time, it finds out how such persons look for a job, what services the labor office uses to find a job and whether the services of the labor office are sufficient for them.

At the end of the bachelor thesis the data are presented and compared and the result is a recommendation to change the procedure of the Labor Office of the Czech Republic in mediation of employment after release from prison.
