

Annotation

„The work deals with the policy-making process of the same sex marriage policy. The policy is very controversial and represents a clash of values between the conservatives, which advocate and recognize only male and female marriage, and the liberals, which stand for the equalization of the same sex marriage Framing the issue by the Multiple Stream Framework helps to explain how the decision-making process went, why the resulting marriage policy allows (or does not allow) same sex couples to get married and who claims credit for the result.“