

Abstract

In my bachelor thesis I deal with electoral behaviour of members of the Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren in Prague. I focused on three topics: Participation of members of ECCB in politics, Relation between members of ECCB and Christian-democratic party, Relation between religiosity of members of ECCB and conservatism. First part of my thesis is summary of literature, where I summarize conclusions of mainly foreign case studies with similar topics. Based on this I define five hypothesis which are related to electoral behaviour of members of ECCB. Next are chapters about methodology, where is described the survey and everything connected to it. The main part is analytical, where I operate with data and then confirm or confute defined hypothesis. At the end I confirmed four out of my five hypothesis. Those are my conclusions: members of ECCB are more politicaly active, members of ECCB take into account political participation of other members, members of ECCB are more likely to vote christian-democratic party, members of ECCB who vote christian-democratic party are not more conservative, members of ECCB consider themselves to be liberal.
