

Abstract

This bachelor's thesis deals with the problem of corruption in the Czech Republic and with the project Reconstruction of the State, which aims to alleviate corrupt practices. The thesis describes corruption from a theoretical point of view, its definition, causes and level of corruption in the Czech Republic. Subsequently, anti-corruption organization Reconstruction of the State is introduced, its genesis and goals, method of operation and financing are described. The thesis also deals with anti-corruption precautions proposed by the Reconstruction of the State and subsequently linking the organization with political parties. At the end of the thesis, an analysis of the impacts of this project is performed.