

The main target is written in the title of this work. I want to find out if there's any relationship between II. vatican council and Rahner's sacramentology. Karl Rahner was a peritus - one of the most known official theologians of the Council. That's why I suppose, that is possible to discover some relations. However the Council didn't speak primarily about sacraments. So - I have to use some more difficult comparison. It is very imprudent idea to compare only used words of Rahner's sacramentology with the used words of Council. The better way is to confront thoughts of these two important (fundamental) points of christian faith.
