

IAA is a weak carboxylic acid, and therefore, it is trapped in its dissociated form in the more alkaline intracellular space. Hence, auxin efflux carriers are essential for the export of the IAA molecule from the cell as well as for creating auxin flow and maxima during developmental processes.