

The main goal of this work is the description of possible images of greek civil war, that arose in Czech daily press during January 1946 and October 1949, thus during so-called third round of the civil war, because we can understand it as an indicator of that how was this conflict interpreted, what was knowledge about the conflict of interests of the Great Powers like, and of importance, that was given to this conflict by Czech political stage.

The description is elaborated by probe in main nationwide daily journals. Most of the materials was found in collection of Ministry of Foreign Affairs – Cutting archive, which is deposited in National archive. Relevancy of this source was verified by partial probes into individual journals. Chapters, that serves as the introduction into context, were elaborated only on secondary sources.

Accomplished description proves, that, before the communists took power in February 1948, there were two images of the conflict (democratic and communistic), which differed from each other in putting accent on different aspects, intensity of writing about he conflict and in used language. After the communists took power in the February 1948, a main change in both images occured and one of them disapeared. It was possible to ordain goals of the communistic image. Goals of democratic journals were not ordained, but several possible hypothesis about them were uttered.
