

Abstract

Diploma thesis “The mental problems of patients with multiple sclerosis and quality of chronic disease management” deals with mental problems of several chosen patients with this disease and enables to view of patient’s feelings and quality of sick-nursing in Czech Republic. It is based on interviews with multiple sclerosis patients, with relations of patients and with provider of services / head nurse /.

The aim of the thesis is to chart mental problems of several chosen patients, to recognise how they go through the illness and to compare points of view of multiple sclerosis patients, relations and provider of services on existing model of chronic disease management in Czech Republic. The analysis of different views is important because efficient care system has big influence on course of disease. In addition multiple sclerosis belongs in chronic diseases which became main cause of death in industrial countries at second half of last century. These diseases are the most frequent reason why people need health care.

Subsequent evaluation of selected methods of research of associated mental problems of multiple sclerosis /and quality of live/ and comparison of all methods which were used in this thesis, in relation to gained information, about to be background for other researches, which main target could be to investigate patient’s feelings and to find the way how the closest relations and chronic disease management can help to solve problems of patients.