

Abstract

The bachelor thesis „The Role of a Man in a Modern Family in the Context of Czech and Anglo- American Imaginative Literature“ investigates the relation between literature, sociology and science. In its following parts it considers the possibilities of sociological cognition by means of imaginative literature. It focuses the role of a man in a modern family. The role of a man is divided into three categories, which are further itemized into separate units. In the concluding chapter are these artificially created categories confronted with fragments of novels and thus attempt to answer the question to what extent is imaginative literature able to describe this topic.
