

This master thesis focuses on the issue of sexual harassment in the media sector from the female journalists' perspective. Our goal was to investigate the emotional experience of journalists who were victims of sexual harassment. The methodology of research was thematic analysis. We analysed testimonies from eight respondents who currently work or worked in journalism. Few interesting concepts arise from the analysis, such as role of the power asymmetry or sexual objectification of female journalists. In conclusion, we defined specific aspects of sexual harassment in described sector and impact on the journalists' work reality.
