Průběh obhajoby: The student presented a very nice and original thesis "The Effect of Military Campaigns on Political Identitity: Evidence from Sherman's March" in which he estimated the effect of Sherman's march on the voting outcomes in affected counties in Atlanta.

He combined several data sources, showed a deep understanding of the literature and techniques used. He also explained very well and in the detail the data limitations.

There was a broad discussion because of the interesting topic and originality of the work. The questions consider the nature of the shock caused by Sherman's march, comparison with the previous shocks studied in earlier works; to what extent Sherman's march caused the economic destruction and/or human capital destruction. We also discussed the reasons for the missing effects. Some of the results are due to small shock and/or temporary character of the shock, what was the effect of migration, etc.

Overall, the student was able to successfully answer all questions and actively participated in the discussion.
