

The aim of this diploma thesis is to introduce new stimuli to programmers of ear-training software. In the first part, a brief description of six already existing eartraining computer programs is given. The second part focuses on the features of a new software which trains the sight-singing of melodies in musical scores with several voices sounding at the same time. In the third part, the question of feedback is addressed, along with other technical details.