

The thesis compares Czech and Finnish physics textbooks on the introductory kinematic topics of position, velocity and distance. The paper compares the apparatus of tasks with which the textbooks are equipped. It mentions the influence of non-terminological meanings of lexemes on their use as terms. The thesis also summarises the development and the present of the Finnish education system and compares the scope of physics teaching in the Czech and the Finnish general education upper secondary school.