

The following thesis attempts to map the structural precursors of the gerund in the framework of language typology. Its main goal is to verify the assumption that the appearance and increasing use and functional load of the gerund is connected to the development of English as a language type.