The aim of this thesis is to through interviews with selected experts from both countries – the Czech Republic and Estonian Republic – find lessons and/or best practices in the areas of disinformation and strategic communication applicable to the Czech and Estonian state. I will gradually try to answer several substantive questions. How do selected experts perceive the resilience of the Czech Republic and Estonian Republic against disinformation? What specific methods do both countries use in combating disinformation? Do they have practical or theoretical knowledge and skills that can benefit the other country?
