

The aim of this work is to study possibilities of presentation of document search results according to keywords given by a user using sociomapping method. Both web search and locally stored documents search will be our interest. We'll create document clusters from such results using one of the clustering algorithms and measures of keywords similarities. These clusters will be input data for creation of direct, or indirect sociomap. Finally we'll compare results of the clustering algorithms from several points of view.